ON THE CAUSES BY WHICH THE PECULIAR SERIES OF PROBABILITY ARE PRODUCED. 1. The characteristic feature of the phenomena to -which the theory of Probability is applicable, as these phenomena present themselves when the rules are capable of being immediately applied to them, was fully discussed and illustrated in some of the earlier chapters. We will now enter into a short examination of the causes by which this feature is produced, taking up the enquiry at the point at which it was left in the brief discussion devoted to the subject in the ninth chapter. 2. To divide the sum total of these causes into objects and agencies, is to make a division which, without pretending to absolute philosophical accuracy, will be sufficiently complete for our present purpose. In the tossing up of a penny, for example, the objects would be the penny or pence which were successively thrown; the agencies, the act of throwing, and every thing which combined with this to make any particular face turn uppermost. This is a very simple and intelligible division, and can easily be extended in meaning, I think, so as to embrace every class of objects with which Probability is concerned. First then let us suppose a succession of such objects absolutely alike, and let them be exposed to agencies in all respects identical. We should expect to find this identity of antecedents followed by a similar identity of consequents. If similar pence,...
